Intel® Educator Ambassador

Gail Holmes, Digital Teaching and Learning, NCDPI - EOL

Gail Holmes has been a driving force in the field of public education for thirty-five years. In that time, she has taught grades 6-12, worked as a technology facilitator and instructional technology coach, and served as an adjunct Library Science professor at UNC-Greensboro. She is currently an Intel® Teach senior trainer for North Carolina.

For the past several years, she has focused on the role of technology in education. As a 2011 Kenan Fellow, she developed “E-Teacher Training: 21st Century Training for the Classroom,” a program that focused on integrating technology into the curriculum to empower students, and provide teachers with resources to enhance learning and promote 21st century teaching. She also co-authored the article “The Kenan Fellows Program for Curriculum and Leadership Development: Teaching Students to Think Outside the Book” which was published in The International Journal of Technology, Knowledge and Society.

Ms. Holmes is a graduate of NC A&T State University (Bachelor Degree - Business Education), UNC-Greensboro (Masters Degree - Business Education and Instructional Technology), and ECU (Masters of Library Science).
