Intel works in technology areas that are subject to export controls by the United States government. Intel must obtain authorization from the Bureau of Industry and Security, U.S. Department of Commerce, before permitting access to citizens from certain countries to Intel technology. This questionnaire is designed to assist Intel in determining whether an export license is required for the potential new CW or PV.

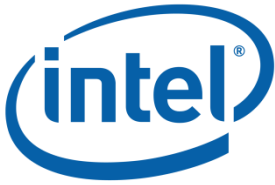

Information on Questions: The Bureau of Industry and Security, U.S. Department of Commerce requires U.S. companies to make export license determinations based on the candidate’s last country of affiliation. Intel is requesting legal status information regarding a person’s legal status in the country where the work will occur to determine whether or not the CW or PV requires an approved export license or if an *intra-company export license can be used.

- *Intra-company export licenses are approved for certain sites located outside the U.S. with Conditions.

Generally, an export analysis is required for every CW or PV except those whose work for Intel will take place in a country where the CW/PV is a citizen, national, landed immigrant or legal permanent resident, or otherwise has the unlimited right to live and work based on the laws of the host country where the person will work.

Special instruction for persons with Dual Citizenship: Export rules regard you as a citizen of the country where you last (most recently) obtained citizenship. Answer the questions below as though you were only a citizen of the country where you last obtained citizenship.
